Spring 2019 Market Update: Farm Industry Market Trends

Steffes Group sold 2,457 tractors and 543 combines in 2018, so we've had a front-row seat from which to view the remarkable recovery in equipment over the past two years.

Let's look at some examples. In November 2018, we sold a 2012 Case-IH Model 550 Quad with 2,248 hours. It went for $232,000 – a whopping 12% increase over the same model in August of 2016, even though the one in 2016 had less than half the hours.

Other increases were even more dramatic. In March 2016, a 2009-model John Deere DB88 went for $83,000. Two years later, a 2010 model of the same machine sold for a 40% increase, bringing $138,000! A John Deere 670 PRWD rose 24% in less than a year.

You get the idea. So what accounts for the stronger prices, and what's ahead?

There was some pent-up demand from several years of low returns when farmers simply didn't feel confident buying machinery. But those decisions can't be put off forever, and demand picked up considerably. We expect the current steady-to-strong market to last at least through the spring of 2019. While there may be a greater supply of equipment at auction, we believe the market will have an appetite to absorb it.

Another trend we've seen is a preference for late model machinery. Things are still tight for many farmers, who are having to adapt to the reality that commodity prices haven't bounced back to the highs from a few years ago.

If you're planning to sell machinery this year, the strong demand is good news. But the higher prices will inevitably result in more supply, and you want to get the best price you can for your assets. As we've said many times, "Caring sellers make for caring buyers." Buyers are willing to pay more for equipment, but they're more focused on machines that are clean and well maintained. We recommend you catch up on any deferred maintenance on machines you plan to sell. If it's clean and in peak operating order, bidders are likely to reward your efforts.

We're always happy to talk about your specific needs. You can reach any of our representatives at SteffesGroup.com.

Despite the absence of the major drivers we've seen for strong farmland markets in the past, prices across the region firmed up and even advanced during the past year. And there's good reason to be optimistic for 2019.

This is true even though there's no surge in commodity prices. China hasn't resumed the buying we saw a few years ago. And interest rates have begun to creep upward.

So what's driving this market? There are at least a couple of major factors:

Better Farming. Out of necessity, many farmers have adapted to the new reality. Rather than waiting on higher commodity prices, they've streamlined operations, cut costs, and improved productivity. As a result, many are making profits despite commodity prices that in the past would have been considered "below the break-even point."

Farmer Buying Power. Many farmers have been able to accumulate substantial wealth over time, allowing them to finance new purchases of land and machinery with minimal debt.

Every spring, we look back over the recent months and evaluate marketplace trends in search of clues that might provide perspective on the state (and maybe even the direction) of the farmland market. During 2018, things began to come together, offering a more cohesive picture than we've seen lately. Land prices were consistently stable or up across the region, marching on without a lot of fanfare. That kind of consistent improvement provides the basis for steady returns that are so critical to both farmers and investors.

Gains in some cases have been substantial. Prices in North Dakota rose 12% in 2018, bringing the state average to $2,665 per acre – offsetting much of the decline we saw over the previous four years. The improvement brings prices closer to the $2,953 in 2013, which reflected a 17% rise that year. (American Society of Farm Managers & Rural Appraisers, ASFMR, North Dakota Chapter.)

The same type of marketplace seems to be holding true in South Dakota as well, based on the available data. One additional wrinkle in South Dakota is an especially vibrant rental market for pasture land.

To the east, Minnesota has a market that varies by land productivity, according to Representative Ashley Huhn, who focused his comments on the more productive central and southern parts of the state. The premium for the better land is a trend we've seen throughout the Midwest, as farmers sought the most efficient returns in a time of weak commodity prices. Max Steffes also reports a growing discrimination based on productivity. A report prepared by the Minnesota chapter of ASFMR notes that cash rents in much of the state are trending lower.

One caveat in identifying trends in central and southern Minnesota is that the limited number of land sales calls for caution in making projections. "We have a number of counties that had as few as five sales, and that doesn't tell you much," said Ashley.

But the data available tends to support what we're seeing elsewhere, which is that the better land is climbing in value. Less productive land – which would include land with trees, water and poorer soils – is steady or declining slightly. Weak commodity prices remain the biggest liability in the short term. Rising interest rates, however, could reduce demand if returns on risk-free investments such as CDs approach the 4% level, where investors are tempted to simply accept the risk-free returns.

Iowa's market also reflects the productivity-based marketplace. This is especially visible in the $1 per CSR2 point bidders are paying, according to Tim Meyer. Based on state-by-state data on actual land sales provided by Farm Credit Services of America, the average price for unimproved ground was nearly $8,300 per acre in the fourth quarter, and one sale in five had a per-acre price of more than $10,000.

Fordyce Farms Equipment Auction

Auctioneer's Note: Richard Fordyce is a 4th generation farmer who served as the Missouri Director of Agriculture from 2013 to 2017. He was recently appointed as the Administrator of the Farm Service Agency (FSA) within the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) in Washington, D.C. Because of this new role in Washington, D.C. Richard, and his wife, Renee, have decided to downsize their family's farming operation to allow him more time to focus on the ag industry as a whole. Steffes Group is honored to be working with the Fordyce family. We look forward to offering this line of quality and well cared for equipment at auction.
